Telemedicine is the remote delivery of health care services, such as health assessments or consultations over the tele communication infrastructure. It allows health care providers to evaluate, diagnose and treat patient using common technology such as videos conferencing without the need for an in-Patient or OP patient visit.

As various parties seek more efficient ways to provide care at less cost to the patient, telemedicine's role has grown. It is often a time- Saving way for a consumer to see and speak to a clinical fro minor and non-urgent medical needs instead of going to a primary care physician's office or emergency department.

In recent years many states have passed laws that make telemedicine easier to practice & federal health regulators are also exploring ways to further grant Medicare reimbursement for telemedicine service.
